Engagement Portraits

First Things First

Your session is tailored to celebrate your story, ensuring every moment feels authentic and comfortable. Whether you're looking for a short, polished session or a more immersive experience, I'll work with you to design a session that fits your vision perfectly. For those seeking a relaxed pace and the opportunity to explore multiple settings, I recommend the hour-and-a-half session. This allows everyone to ease into the experience naturally, with time for breaks and candid moments. If you're confident in front of the camera and know exactly what you want, a shorter session may suit you best.

I take care of every detail – from location scouting to planning – to create an experience that feels effortless yet extraordinary. Whether you prefer an early morning glow or the golden light of sunset, your session will be as unique as the memories we'll capture together. Have a special idea? Let's bring it to life!

serving others is the highest form of love

we were not expecting much when we booked our wedding last minute, but lindsey was amazing. our daughter had a million questions for lindsey, and she was so patient with her. we had no idea what photos we wanted but it was like lindsey knew what photos would mean the most to us. my family loved all the photos and commented that they might want to do a photo shoot, at the lake this fall, with lindsey. we would 100% recommend booking lindsey for any of your wedding (or any) photography needs. - e. meyering

Thank you so much for the beautiful photos. We will cherish them for years to come. - m. carlson

Thank You so much for everything - I wish I could find the right words for how thankful I am! - d. jensen

Your Day, Your Rules.

How Much Coverage is Enough?

When planning out the timeline for your elopement day (or days), you might be wondering, how much of it should you have professionally documented?

Want my honest opinion? Let's get into it:

Your day deserves just as much documentation as anyone else getting married–and maybe even more.

3 Reasons Why.

1. While sometimes people think a wedding is just saying your vows and spending an hour or two taking portraits–the day you get married is so much more than that. Your wedding day is going to be the day you remember every year on your anniversary for the rest of your life together–and everything that happened that day from sun up to sun down is a part of your experience. Couples having big weddings get the entire story of their day document, so why shouldn't you?
2. If you're spending all of this time intentionally planning the absolute best, most authentic experience for you and your partner–don't you want to be able to relive all of it and remember it precisely, in full-color detail?
3. If you're not having as many people attend your event in-person, the photos of your day are truly the only way to share your experience with others–don't you want to be able to do that?

When you look through your photos at home and your albums you get transported back to that time. It's almost like a real time machine. It's the one tangible thing we can hold on to and get lost in. Where every vivid detail comes flooding back to all our very precious memories. Sometimes even the things that can't be seen come back with that memory - the smell of a perfume, the sound of a laugh... Why wouldn't you want as many of those tokens as you could have?

So, when deciding how much of your day to have me along for–remember that just because I'm there doesn't mean that it's going to feel like an all-day photoshoot. I'm there to melt into the background, to make sure you have the best experience possible, and to just document you two having the time of your life.
